

Look out for fun from Chicago. Butler is at work on the democratic platform.

What development Ben Butler can get into is not within the reach of any man living.

The country is anxiously waiting to see the magnitude of the blunder the democrats will hatch at the present convention.

The independents of Pennsylvania haven't got dyspepsia. They are preparing to issue an address endorsing Blaine and Logan.

The outlook in Louisiana is not so discouraging for republicans when one takes into account the Blaine and Logan boom among the sugar planters of that state.

If some democratic candidates for the presidency were as conscientious as Mr. Fulton in submitting to the will of God in deeming their public lives forever closed, the party would have quite a burden taken from its shoulders.

The American railway system has nearly 100,000 miles and has cost something like $500,000,000, and nearly four-fifths of that amount has been expended on the locomotives. There are estimated to be 95,000 railroad engines now in use, and they cost not less than $10,000 apiece.

After the lapse of many years the republican idea of commercial progress is beginning to take deep root in the south. The only way to build up the south by developing its resources is to encourage home productions and let every man vote as he pleases, and then let the vote be fairly counted.

A prominent democrat in the national convention tried to bluff Joe McCullough, the brilliant and widely-known editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The democrat wanted to bet a suit of clothes that if Cleveland was nominated, he would be elected. McCullough said he wasn't particularly in need of a new suit just then, but if the gentleman was in earnest he would bet him $500 and put the money up then, that the nominee of the democratic convention—Cleveland or any one else—would be defeated. The democrat thought a minute and then said he guessed he wouldn't bet.

The cholera outbreak in France produces effects as tragic and sometimes as comic as were ever described in many accounts in history or fiction of plague, stricken cities. The panic in Toulon is almost disgusting. Out of 69,000 taxpayers, 40,000 have fled, as many as 6000 going in a single day. Terror has spread even to the marines, for when the admiral allowed them to leave on good cause shown, every marine produced a letter with cholera cases. Labor is suspended, commercial acceptances cannot be paid, numerous failures occur daily, and the supply of provisions has almost stopped, the laboring people having no money to buy.

Colonel Vilas, of Madison, has been elected permanent chairman of the national democratic convention—an honor which he justly deserves. He began his address when he took the chair, by arraigning the republican party. This course was natural. Colonel Vilas and every other democrat who is in sympathy with his party, has occasion to find fault with the republican party. It has had no mercy on the democrats for the past twenty-four years. It has beaten them at every national election, and the programme is to beat them again. It is no wonder that Colonel Vilas kicks at the merciless boldness of the republicans. We presume that he and his democratic brethren will always entertain a grudge against the republicans for keeping the democrats out of office these many years. But it is the will of the people, and the republicans can't go back on the people.

THE IOWA PROHIBITION LAW.
The new prohibition law of Iowa went into effect on the 4th of July. Upon the face of the law it is a complete prohibition, and it was supposed when it was enacted, that there would be no question in regard to its operation. The constitutional amendment upon two years ago was a failure, owing to a clerical error in the proceedings of the general assembly in relation to the amendment. It was thought that a law could be more quickly enacted and more vigorously carried out than a constitutional amendment, and the result is the present prohibitory law.

Well, how does it work? In the interior part of the state where prohibition is less needed than in prominent railway centers or river towns, the law is being fairly well enforced; but in the latter places the law is treated with contempt. The report from Council Bluffs is that "six saloons closed up, but the others are running full blast, as usual, in reckless disregard of the law." Dubuque is very little better as "all the saloons are open and doing their customary business, with the thin disguise of fictitious names for beverages." We are told that at Des Moines, "the druggists have taken out permits and are doing a lively business in the counter trade." At Keokuk, "twenty-two saloons sell mild drinks in full view, with abundantly-patronized cellars or rear rooms, where the ardent is on draught."

The trouble in enforcing the law in these places is that public sentiment in the localities is largely against prohibition, and by common consent of the public the saloon-keepers openly violate the law, no one caring to make complaint against them. So it seems that the new prohibition law will prove a failure.

The sale of Baxter's Mandrake Bitters is immense and rapidly increasing; the reason of it is they cure. Price 25 cents. Sold by Stearns & Baker.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

There is a queer combination of democratic minds at Chicago. A monogamy couldn't contain a more striking collection of unlike spirits than the national democratic convention. The only thing upon which there is really any agreement is that they want office. Upon any other question the convention seems to be a regular Babel.

The party meets in a national convention with a queer history behind it. For twenty-four years it has suffered defeat. It has been on the wrong end of every great question since that time. It sympathized with slavery. It opposed the war that the Union might be saved. Its leaders in congress voted against war appropriations. It opposed reconstruction. It denounced the resumption of specie payments. It has always opposed the American system of protection. There has not been a question of national importance—one that was progressive in its spirit and beneficial to the country—that the republican party has supported, but that the democrats have opposed.

With this sort of a history the democrats meet in their convention of 1884, boasting of victory to come. They are troubled with discordant elements. They have plenty of prominent candidates but none that are without fault. Every candidate they have has a weakness that will carry him down to defeat. The factions can't be harmonized so that the harmony will stay with them during the campaign. They will likely nominate Cleveland to please a few independents, and yet we are told by old democratic leaders that his nomination would be a humiliation and a "dead give away." The fact is, the party has not the courage to take up some democratic leader—a man of pronounced convictions on democratic principles—to match against Mr. Blaine. They dare not do it, although defeat would not be more certain in that case than in case of the nomination of Cleveland. So not having a leader that they dare run, they will probably run an accidental man of very small ability.

There will be a confusion of tongues on the tariff question. The people want a frank and unequivocal declaration from both parties on the tariff as well as on all other national and important questions. The republican platform openly and squarely avows for wise protection; now let us see if the democratic platform shall do the same by a negative and straddling declaration. There are nine chances out of ten that it will.

THE FIRST DECISION

Arrived at by the Democratic Convention

Is That the Unit Rule Shall Stand in the New York Delegation.

Hubbard, of Texas, Made Temporary Chairman—The Unit Rule Debate.

Work of the Committees—No Progress on Platform—Vilas To Be Permanent Chairman.

The Excitement at Night—Surrendering Butler—Opinions on the Situation—Cleveland Still Has the Inside Track—Notes.

CHICAGO, July 9.—Tuesday, July 9, was not a first-class specimen of Chicago summer weather. At about 1:30 a. m. it began to rain, and for the next hour or so there was a heavy shower. The sun rose behind the clouds, and a waylay was threatened. However, this was a threat which was not carried into execution, and though cloudy all day, there was no more rain, and the coolness of the temperature made it very comfortable for the occupants of seats in the convention hall.

The political movement began early. By 8 o'clock the throngs of delegates and delegates' wives were making lively for the "other fellow," and putting in their work where they thought it would do most good for their own favorites. The hotel corridors were full of groups of men, excitedly discussing the merits and demerits of the several candidates. Tammany was out in force with the one object of beating Cleveland, while the county Democracy and other friends of the governor were at work countering any influence adverse to their great chief. The situation had not been set in action by his enemies. The situation had not changed since the day before and it was still Cleveland, the big favorite.

As the hour for the assembly of the convention approached, crowds began to gather about the convention hall, and by 11 o'clock a dense mass of humanity stretched up and down Michigan avenue for hundreds of feet on each side of the entrances and it required vigilance on the part of the police to keep a passage open for those who had the privilege of entering the hall.

There was more display made by the delegations in going to the hall than in the case of the republican convention. Several hundred of music engaged and marched to the inspiring strains of the brasses. One of the earliest delegations to reach the building was the county Democracy of New York, with band and banners. The Kansas men were led by martial music and Tammany, 50 strong, made a fine display.

INSIDE THE BUILDING.
Here the scene was an extraordinary one, indeed. Draped in green, and from the hall of the gallery, and looking from staff at all points. Above the sounding-board back of the chairman's desk was a mass of red, white and blue bunting, and on top of which was a statue of Justice of Liberty, and among which rested the portraits of Washington, Jefferson and Jackson. The galleries were decorated with shields bearing the names of the states and the back of the hall was covered with drapery of red, white and blue.

The chairman's desk was situated in the middle of the east side of the hall, and the delegates' and alternates' seats were directly in front of the seats facing east, and being comfortable plush-covered open chairs. On either side of these seats are the seats for spectators facing north or south as the section referred to is south or north of the delegates' section. When the convention was called to order there were about 6,000 people in the hall, and about 5,000 seats were vacant. The effect of having the spectators on each side of the chair is not so impressive as to have them in front. The idea of a "sea of faces" is not so well defined, and the effect not so grand. But the loss of effect is probably compensated for in the advantage of having the delegates in a more compact mass.

There were many faces of men who have national reputations among those upon which Chairman Butler looked upon when he took the oath to call the body to order. William F. Vilas and ex-Senator Donnelly were in the Wisconsin delegation. Governor Leon Abbott and Senator McPherson.

At 12:40 p. m. W. H. Barnum, chairman of the national committee, took possession of the hall and called the assembly to order, and requested Rev. D. C. Marquis, of this city, to make the opening prayer.

At the conclusion of the prayer Mr. Barnum arose and said:
"GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION. There is promise as there never was before for Democratic success this year. To succeed, it is necessary that you should be harmonious and united. We are here to nominate for temporary chairman of this convention a man who shall be acceptable as well to the east as to the west; a ticket that will harmonize the factions throughout the nation, and insure victory in November. No effort has been made to nominate a temporary chairman of this convention in the interest of any candidate, but I have been directed by the executive committee of the Democratic national convention to nominate Richard G. Hubbard, of Texas, as temporary chairman of this convention, and I name Senator Jones, of Louisiana, and the Hon. A. S. Hewitt, of New York, to escort the gentleman to the chair."
The committee having performed their duty Mr. Barnum introduced Mr. Hubbard to the convention and he addressed it as follows:
Mr. Hubbard said that the Democratic party had met on a great occasion which would justify any mistake. Though they had been out of power a quarter of a century they still had the confidence and the zeal to succeed as well now as when the banner of victory perched above their heads. But for treason in the senate chamber they would now have the presidency. The deed had to be done, the impious deed—the hand of the robber—struck it from them and through perjury and falsehood stole the presidency. Though rightly elected, these great leaders, Tilden and Hancock, were the speakers were interrupted by great cheers, which rent the hall, preferring peace rather than war, renounced what properly belonged to them. The theft of the presidency in 1876 was the blackest stain in the country's history. [Applause.] The Democrats would have succeeded in 1876 had not money, fresh and uncut from Washington, been poured out like water. [Applause.] The Democrats would very likely go into power this fall after a long intermission, but to do so they must adopt a platform which said what it meant and meant what it said. [Applause.] They wanted nothing which was double-tongued, but a pledge in favor of the reduction of taxation and the $100,000,000 tariff. There never was a time when the Democrats had so good a chance for success, but they should not devote one iota from their principles for disaffected Republicans. If they wanted to come into the ranks they could do so. Governor Hubbard deprecated the bloody shirt cry raised by the Republicans. The Democratic party would reform affairs and should not forward candidates whose names would be in themselves a platform. [Cheers.] It wants a platform that would speak in unadorned tones, or as a Delphic oracle. It should declare against corruption in the government; against the enormities of the army; against the socialism department of justice; against the abuses of the postal service; against robbery in high places; that the burdens of the government shall be borne equally and equitably on all classes of the people; and that the hundred millions of surplus revenue should not be allowed to accumulate. In conclusion, he urged that whatever candidates were nominated should be supported loyally, declaring that he who would not support them would not be a good Democrat and hardly a patriot. [Applause.]

TEST YOUR BAKING POWDER TO-DAY!
Brands advertised are a guarantee of purity. CONTAINE AMMONIA.

100,000 ANGRY HOUSEKEEPERS

Wish to know why the Royal Baking Powder Company withhold from the public the simple intelligence that their Powder contains AMMONIA.

Eminent Physicians and Chemists

SAY THAT

in any human diet. Its use in food is an offense to nature.

Tartaric acid is found in all Cream of Tartar. It is a natural product of vegetable origin, derived from the wines which produce Cream of Tartar. It is a constituent of the grape as well as other fruits.

The idea that Tartaric acid can be converted into lime at the temperature of the oven is the rankest nonsense, and could only originate in the brain of one totally devoid of chemical knowledge. The "Royal" contains it. It has no injurious action upon the system.

The crying of "Lime" in the way the Royal Baking Powder do is another trick to extricate themselves from the use of the powerful drug Ammonia in their powder.

DO NOT TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT.

Every housekeeper can prove the truth of our statements by placing a can of the "Royal" top down on a hot stove until heated, then remove the cover, and smell—"AMMONIA." This test will show that the "Royal" contains AMMONIA; that DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER does not contain Ammonia. The strength of our powder can be proven by the consumers' reliable test.

THE TEST OF THE OVEN.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior to the "Royal." It contains no Ammonia. The Royal contains Ammonia. The use of Ammonia in articles of food I believe to be injurious—ELIAS H. BARTLEY, B. S., M. D., Chemist of the department of Health, Brooklyn (N. Y.), May 20, 1884.
